(The Loss of) The Assumptive World & Re-creating Meaning

1. The world is benevolent. ➢ (It’s a good place.)

2. The world is meaningful. ➢ (It is understandable, therefore predictable and controllable.)

3. The self is worthy. ➢ (I am a decent person and can avoid being harmed by it.)

WHAT IS GRIEF?

Grief is a normal and natural response to loss.

Study Sample

• Location: Israel
• 269 participants
• Born in Poland, Romania, Hungary, or the former Czechoslovakia
• Most participants were 9-21 old during the Holocaust
• Lived under the Nazi rule/occupation in Europe or North Africa
• Immigrated to Israel after World War II as refugees
Some findings:

The ability to reminisce with others with shared lived experience creates a sense of connection.

“I was involved in my community with a group of Holocaust survivors about 3 years ago. The survivors struggled to talk about what they went through but I was among the few who said that he has nothing to hide, and it doesn’t affect me emotionally to talk about things because you can’t change the past. After describing some of the things I went through in the Holocaust, people who had difficulties also began to open up and share their stories.”

(Dov from Haifa)
Some findings:

The importance of being able to guide others and successive generations – to learn from the past and not let history repeat itself – and tying identity to being a survivor.

“The memories of what I went through do not belong only to me but also the next generations . . . and to the Jewish people. It is my duty, and the duty of all those who went through the Holocaust, to ensure that what happened to us will be remembered for generations.”

(Adina from Tel Aviv)
Some findings:

Discussion about multiple losses during childhood and its long-term impact

“I had no youth because of the war. . . . They kicked us from our house, from school, from our friends. Then we were moved to a labor camp...There are bitter memories, there were bombings in the city; I knitted socks for Nazi soldiers at 10 years of age.”

(Esther from Be’er Sheva)

“I can’t forget my parents and siblings. I was left alone and I suffered a lot. Every time I think how good they were, and in the end, what kind of end they had. I was alone and that, I cannot forget.”

(Ariel from Haifa)
Study Sample

- Location: Israel
- 55 participants
- Children of Holocaust survivors in Israel
- Between 35 and 55 years old
- “Parents had emigrated to Israel from Europe in the late 1940s and 1950s after surviving Nazi extermination camps, forced-labor camps, ghetto incarceration, or periods of hiding”
- Interviewer (researcher) is also a child of Holocaust survivors
Some observations:

Childhood Curiosity

“I remember...when I first...I mean I noticed my father’s number. I must have been about 4. I asked him why I don’t have one, too....

He laughed...and said I don’t get to have one. I said but I wanted a number too, like his [long laugh] .... He looked at me very seriously and said bad people did it to him and that I shouldn’t want one.”

The Lived Experience of Providing Care and Support Services for Holocaust Survivors in Australia

Teshuva, K., Brorowski, A., & Wells, Y. (2017). The lived experience of providing care and support services for Holocaust survivors in Australia. Qualitative Health Research, 27, 1104-1114.

Study Sample

• Location: Australia
• 70 “aged care workers” (carers) across 10 focus groups
• 61 females, 9 males
• Job roles includes nurses, personal care workers, home support workers, case managers, activities staff, assessment clinicians, and allied health professionals
• Host sites provided care services or aged care assessment for Holocaust survivors
Some findings:

- Elevated levels of anxiety, fear, anger, and suspicion compared to other clients:

  “Sometimes they’ll tell you a lot but they’re not telling you significant stuff, like the care they actually need or that they’re not managing at home... because those who were sick and frail back then, during the Holocaust, would be hauled out [and killed]” (p.1108)

  “There’s a damn good reason why they are anxious, you know --- ‘I lost everybody in my world’ – or they lived for four years without hardly any food, et cetera” (p.1108)
Some findings:

• The experience of trauma requires person-centered approaches

  ➢ Building trust
    Being friendly, honest, kind, respectful, and reliable

  ➢ Providing opportunity for clients to assume control over their own lives
    “Never forcing anyone to do something they don’t want to do”
    “Working together with the clients”
    “Listening to their wishes”
    “Reading the situation”
    “Being flexible”
Some findings:

• Taking care in talking about the past
  - Some survivors will want to talk about their past, others will not.
  - Respect an individual’s wishes
  - Do not ask probing questions
  - Be prepared to take the time to listen

• Caring for survivors has an emotional impact
  - Caring for survivors can be stressful. Engage in self-care strategies.
  - Seek out support from managers and peers
  - Maintain a sense of humor
  - Try not to take aggressive behaviors personally
  - Set realistic boundaries regarding what can and cannot be done
